Judson ISD is Growing Leaders

Converse, TX – On March 25, 2022, the first Athletic Leadership Summit was held, bringing together coaches and athletes to invest in character building and leadership development.

An Athletic Leadership Summit was a vision that Executive Director of Athletics, Triva Corrales, and her department has had for quite some time. This year, that vision turned into a reality.

“We wanted to take time out of their day to encourage them to continue to grow as leaders themselves, as individuals, and invest in coaches and kids, in all areas,” Corrales said.

The summit was led by Stephen Mackey, author and motivational speaker, who discussed what makes a student-athlete special, and what makes a good team great.

“What athletics provides is so much more than an extracurricular,” Mackey said. “It’s a place for mentorship. It’s a classroom. It’s a launching pad. It’s a reason for kids to continue to push through all the junk of life. It gives them a reason to show up.”

When it comes to being a student-athlete, it can be difficult, having to balance school, family, friends, and social pressures, and still ensure that they put in the commitment and dedication to win games every week.
